

STARHAVEN

42 Frognal, London NW3 6AG

Tel: 020 7435 8724 • Fax: 020 7435 4169

books@starhaven.org.uk • www.starhaven.org.uk

Forthcoming – February 2008

I usually avoid reading poetry because I have read so much, and I often am disappointed. But the minute I started reading [this] I sat right up and came totally awake both for subject and for language and style. That's good stuff. I like the esoteric vocabulary too – “beaver lid” and the sweet confluence of cows with motherhood – a diverse set of poems really, political, personal, historical, in the moment. Reminding me again it's not that there need be a “cowboy” poetry but, as we move toward it, a poetry of work and daily life and the land. Which includes history and family.

– Gary Snyder

John Dofflemyer's poetry rings with the truth of western experience. His language is precise and powerful, his images are stark and candid. As a result, this verse transcends region and touches the human heart.

– Gerald Haslam

JOHN DOFFLEMYER is a cattle-rancher and poet. His work has been widely published in journals and chapbooks. He lives at the edge of the Sierra Nevadas on a piece of land his family has worked since shortly after the California goldrush.

ISBN 0-936315-26-1. £8/$15. Pre-orders to above address. Review copies on request.

In US: Box 44320, Lemon Cove, CA 93244